As dawn broke over the English Channel, Allied soldiers from the United States, Britain, Canada, and France boarded landing craft and set sail for the heavily fortified coast of Normandy. Their mission: to establish a foothold on Nazi-occupied France and begin the liberation of Europe from the clutches of fascism.

Assault on the Beaches

The landing beaches, code-named Omaha, Utah, Sword, Juno, and Gold, were fiercely defended by German troops. As the landing craft approached the shore, they came under heavy fire from machine guns, artillery, and mortars. The soldiers faced a harrowing ordeal as they disembarked and attempted to establish a foothold on the treacherous sands.

At Omaha Beach, the fighting was particularly intense. The American troops faced a formidable defense line and suffered heavy casualties.
