Benedict Arnold: The Treacherous General

Benedict Arnold was born in Norwich, Connecticut, in 1741. He was a successful merchant before the outbreak of the Revolutionary War, and he joined the Continental Army in 1775. Arnold quickly rose through the ranks, and he was soon one of George Washington's most trusted generals.

Arnold's most famous victory came at the Battle of Saratoga in 1777. Arnold led the American forces to a decisive victory over the British, and he was hailed as a hero. However, Arnold's fortunes soon took a turn for the worse. He was passed over for promotion several times, and he became increasingly bitter. In 1780, Arnold began to negotiate with the British. He agreed to surrender the American fort at West Point to the British in exchange for a large sum of money.

Arnold's plot was discovered before he could carry it out. He fled to the British lines, and he was commissioned as a general in the British Army. Arnold fought against the Americans for the rest of the war, and he became one of the most hated men in the United States.

Nathan Hale: The Martyr Spy

Nathan Hale was born in Coventry, Connecticut, in 1755. He was a brilliant student, and he graduated from Yale College in 1773. Hale taught school for a few years before the outbreak of the Revolutionary War. He joined the Continental Army in 1775, and he quickly rose through the ranks.

Hale's most famous mission was to spy on the British forces in New York City. He disguised himself as a Dutch schoolmaster and he entered the city in September 1776. Hale gathered valuable information about the British defenses, but he was captured by the British on September 21, 1776.

Hale was hanged by the British on September 22, 1776. He was just 21 years old. Hale's execution shocked the American people, and he became a martyr for the cause of American independence. His last words, "I only regret that I have but one life to lose for my country," are still remembered today.
